The organoleptic characteristics of Merlot are universally recognized by all wine lovers worldwide, who consider this grape as rounded and soft. Thanks to its great ability to adapt to different climatic and soil conditions, the Merlot has spread widely in many places around the world. Wines resulting from this variety are smooth, intense, ruby red in color and with a scent that allows you to recognize very clearly the red fruits of the forest (such as blackberries, raspberries and currants).

On the other hand, Cabernet Sauvignon is synonymous of a fine wine, a sumptuous and refined wine, born to age with elegance and to challenge the years. Cabernet is easily recognizable for its exuberant nature: it has a complex and lively scent, which is reminiscent of the scents of the forest: blueberries, black currants and blackberries that are connected with alpine herbs, traces of undergrowth and rocks.

Sangiovese is one of the most important Italian vines, the most cultivated grape in Italy. The origin of the Sangiovese name is uncertain. Some people believe that it derives from "Sangiovese" which means originally from San Giovanni Valdarno, while others believe that it derives from "sanguegirovese", which means "sangue di Giove" (blood of Giove), in reference to Monte Giove, near Santarcangelo di Romagna. The term Sangiovese defines a large number of varieties, or clones, which have differentiated over the centuries due to their ability of adapting to different territories.

The "Bordeaux blend", or the assembly of Merlot and Cabernet Sauvignon, has been around for a long time throughout Italy and was originally called Bordeaux or Bordò. By "blend" is meant the mixing of different wines by grape variety, origin or age. Each grape has different characteristics and has the specific task of contribute with the own quality to increase the harmony of the whole.

The Biscardo family has been able to combine an international well-known blend, the "Bordeaux blend" with a grape of great personality and a strong presence in the most noble wine-producing regions in Italy.

A wine with great potential for consumers all over the world, that has its roots in the Italian tradition and in the experience of more than 100 vintages of the Biscardo Family.
